In an ever-changing media environment, the journalism major is designed to be innovative and dynamic, while adhering to a critical understanding of medias role in a diverse, global society. The major emphasizes community engagement and global competence. Our program gives students a toolbox of skills and a critical study of mass media. The BA in journalism starts with courses in journalism and communication that provide a core set of skills and a critical exploration of journalism. It then requires students to create a program of study that offers flexibility in how they apply journalism. These skills are further honed through application in a professional media setting. This degree requires students to choose either a minor or a second major that will further complement a students journalistic expertise.

Students take courses from four categories:
Craft: courses in journalism and communication that develop skills in the practice of journalism.
Critical Inquiry: courses in journalism and communication that offer critical and theoretical study of journalism and mass media.
Application: courses where students apply their skills in a real-world situation through a practicum class, an internship, or working at campus media (e.g. The Bark, KUMD). This is the capstone experience.
Electives: courses that allow students to specialize their journalism studies based on their skills, interests and long-term goals. These courses come primarily from JOUR and COMM, but they can also be interdisciplinary, including choices such as cultural entrepreneurship, writing studies, English, and art.
